There are so many countries in our big world, so many people live in each one, and each person consumes and creates products, so what can we give to society?

Countries based in warm places, such as Africa, usually provide the rest of humanity with different fruits as plants are completely nice to be raised in tropics and give their maximum. ~~It~~

In colder regions there are usually lots of forests that can provide us wood, also in regions such as Siberia you are to find lots of factories and facilities focused on metals, as in cold ground it is more likely to ~~can~~ find minerals. There is no point in raising fruits there as they can't absorb minerals from such infertile earth.

There are popular countries that do not have minerals, metals of a tropical climate but people are attracted there anyway. For example, beautiful Georgian mountains attract tourists even after they get to know that ~~there~~ Georgia has no sea, no climate and awful economy.

~~My~~ In conclusion I'd like to say that each country and single person is an important part of the great society and we all generate something necessary.
